Today we are speaking to Lily Martin. Lily is an actress and has had parts in many theatrical productions, including many in the West End of London. Lily is about to star in a new production of Les Misérables, but instead of being in the West End, she has agreed to do a UK-wide tour with a provincial theatrical company. Let's find out why she is leaving the lucrative West End to tread the boards around the country.

-Lily, so you are just about to start this four month tour of the UK with a little known theatre company. Why have you decided to do that?

-I have loved theatre all my life. My mum took me to my local theatre when I was just five and I was hooked. I know that not everyone can afford to travel to London to see the big stage productions and so I decided that I would give something back to the British public for all the support that they have given me over the years. Doing a tour like this will allow me to get back in touch with my roots and share my knowledge and experiences of acting with other local actors and actresses and hopefully inspire them to move forward in their careers.

-That is a fantastic idea! Where does the tour go?

-We travel from Edinburgh in the north right down to Torquay and Brighton in the south. The dates I'm most looking forward to though are in my home town of Sheffield. Sheffield has two wonderful theatres - the Lyceum and the Crucible and I will be playing two weeks at the Lyceum in front of a home audience.

-Have you ever played at the Lyceum before?

-Not for at least 15 years! The last time I was there was to watch a production of Joseph and the Technicolor Dreamcoat a couple of years ago - I love both the film and the musical. My last role at the Lyceum was in a Romeo and Juliet and I played Juliet.

-What is the worst job you've done?

-When I was a student I was trying to save up some money to go to London. I ended up working as a chicken packer in a factory. It was the smelliest and slimiest job I have ever had - I hated it! It put me off eating chicken for life!

-What is the most important lesson life has taught you?

-I think it is that you should never give up if you want something hard enough! It took me a long time to become an established actress and it would have been very easy to give up, but I persevered and can now pick and choose what I want to do. Hold on tight to those dreams and don't let them get away!

- Good morning. James Communication Company. My name is Sylvie. How can I help you?
- Hello there. My name is David. I would like to have some more information about the job that has been advertised on the internet.
- Let me have a look. Can you tell me which one it is?
- It is the one for a customer service representative. The part time one.
- Ah yes, I have it here. OK. So the role is a temporary one and will initially last until the end of December 2014. It's eight hours a week and the hours are flexible so you would be able to discuss which hours you would like to do at the interview. Maybe you would like to do evenings?
- Yes that would be great as I am still studying at the moment. I could easily manage to do a couple of evenings a week, say from 6pm to 10pm? Do I need any qualifications?
- No. It just says that you would have to take a short test at your interview to check whether your reading, writing and speaking and listening skills are good enough as you will be answering phone calls, taking messages and logging calls on the computer. Have you used a computer before?
- Yes, of course. I use them all the time for my study. That sounds good. Can you please send me an application form?
- Yes, of course. When it is complete, please send it to our HR department.
- HR Department?
- Yes, that is Human Resources. I can send it as an email or through the post.
- Email would be fine. My email is david@sunmail.com. Many thanks
- No problem. I will send it now. Goodbye.

LEWIS: Hello. Welcome to Money Box Live. Today we are looking at the consequences of driving without insurance. As people struggle to make ends meet, they are looking at as many ways as possible of saving money. If they have not had a claim against their car insurance, they think that they could get away without it. But what happens if you have an accident or someone gets killed and you have no insurance? Mia from Gloucester, what is your experience?

MIA: Fifteen years ago I lost my son who was killed in a massive collision on the M25 outside London. A multi-car pile-up was caused because of a drink driver who lost control of his car. This man had no insurance or car tax. He was driving under the influence of drink and he had no thought of what implications his lack of insurance could have on other people. My son lost his life, along with three other people and many other people were injured or had severe damage to their vehicles, but what happened to the driver who caused all this mayhem? A few years behind bars and the loss of his licence for two years. How can that be fair?

LEWIS: Yes, that's an interesting question. We've had several emails and calls like that, Mia. Let me go first to Sue Jones from the Association of British Insurers.

SUE: Thanks. Well hi, Mia. The short answer is no, it isn't fair; in this case I believe that the driver stated that he did not know his insurance had run out. However, driving uninsured is an "absolute" offence, meaning that if there is no insurance in place and the vehicle is in use, the offence has been committed. There is no obligation upon insurers to do anything apart from honour cover when it is in place. The onus is upon the user of the vehicle to comply with the Road Traffic Act by making sure that their insurance is in order before they use a vehicle...

MIA: Yes, I understand that is the case.

SUE: ... however, the other issue is that the driver had been drinking. He shouldn't have been driving at all. Again, he said that the reason he had driven was because he had not had a drink since midnight and he thought that the alcohol would have been out of his system when he set off. In fact, he had been drinking heavily all evening and he was still well above the limit when he got in his car. The maximum term for imprisonment in a case like this is 14 years in the UK and I understand that the judge imposed the maximum sentence. Although this is no consolation for you, the judge was doing the best that he could for your son.

LEWIS: A dreadful story but actually, I believe that some good has come from this story, Mia.

MIA: Yes, that is correct.

LEWIS: Can you explain?

MIA: Whilst the man was in prison, he decided that he could not face driving again. He has returned his driving licence and will never drive again. He has also completed a rehabilitation course and has not consumed alcohol again since he left prison. Maybe he did have a conscience after all.

LEWIS: Well that sounds very positive. However, let us hear from an uninsured driver to hear what he has to say on the subject. Michael is just 23 and has been driving for three years. He has had an accident almost every six months and his insurance quote is a whopping £1700. Good morning, Michael.

MICHAEL: Morning. Yes £1700 insurance and my car is only worth £500. As well as that, I would have had to pay an excess of £1000 if I had an accident. I have not got a job and this is much more than I can afford. I need a car to get to town to sign on - I have no choice but to drive without insurance.

LEWIS: Where do you live, Michael?

MICHAEL: I live in London.

MIA: (exclaims) WHAT!!!! With all the transport available in London? How can you say you have to have a car?

MICHAEL: Well it is my choice. I have got a bad back and can't stand or walk for very long. So a car is my only option.

MIA: Surely with London on your doorstep it would be cheaper to have taxis if your back is bad. What about if you have an accident in your uninsured car? You could kill someone or seriously damage someone's property!

MICHAEL: I just have to take that chance. I cannot afford the insurance and so that is that. I guess I would have to go to prison.

LEWIS: Yes, quite. And I think that this is an argument that could run and run. I think we will have to leave it at that for today. Anyway thank you very much for your calls. That is all we have time for. More on our website, bbc.co.uk/moneybox.

Sandra: Dr Hilary Green joins me now.

Hilary: Good morning, Sandra.

Sandra: Today we are talking about energy drinks. Many people are using energy drinks to give them a boost, to keep awake or even just to quench thirst. But are they really good for you? Dr Hilary Green - are the adverts really accurate - are energy drinks worth buying?

Hilary: We've all seen the television commercials for energy drinks, and many of them seem fairly accurate. They often talk about that three o'clock in the afternoon dip in energy, or the days when we just cannot get our regular "get up and go" in gear. The thing about many of these beverages is that they are simply a blend of unhealthy sugar, caffeine, chemicals, and horrible stimulants.

Sandra: That doesn't sound very good at all!

Hilary: Actually, some consumer studies have shown that people actually experience a deeper "crash" after using these drinks and that they can actually impair performance during workouts and exercise. There are some serious cardiologic disruptions that occur in the healthy and the not-so-healthy when they use traditional energy drinks before and after a workout.

The initial findings seem to emphasize that these beverages contain compounds that interact with the caffeine and which cause problems with the cardiac blood vessels. This prevents them from opening and performing as they should, and clearly this can lead to everything from fatigue and dizziness to serious health problems.

Sandra: So should we avoid these altogether? What is our best option?

Hilary: Rather than leaning on chemistry to create a false sense of energy, and to feel a devastating decline in overall energy later, stick with things that really energize the cells. Plain water is ideal for the pre-workout period as it helps to prevent any muscle cramping and dehydration. If, however, you are worried about performance, look for natural substances that work as an antioxidant. When the cells in the body perform their normal functions they can come under what is known as "oxidative stress". This causes problems during cell production and can often lead people to experience a deep sense of fatigue, illness and more.

Sandra: So what do these antioxidants do?

Hilary: By giving the body a readily available source of antioxidants in the pre-workout hours it is as if the cells were receiving a direct injection of actual energy. Rather than a stimulant such as caffeine that can jolt the body into what it believes is a state of readiness, the use of an antioxidant-based energy drink actually delivers "the goods".

Sandra: So where can these antioxidants be found?

NOCN ESOL International Listening
Level C1 Advanced Paper BB
Sample Examination Recordings

Hilary: Well, you can find them in green tea, for example. That will be much better for you and will help your body through the dip in energy rather than relying on some quite nasty junk.

Sandra: Dr Hilary Green, that certainly sounds much healthier. Thank you very much indeed for some very useful information and joining us this morning.

Hilary: Thank you Sandra.
